Rising unemployment and falling spending power in the eurozone will have to be financed from increased contributions from those richer countries, mostly in northern Europe. "Austerity measures will have to be taken by richer countries, because the deficit needs to be financed by poorer countries," said Hans-Peter Schweitzer, chief economist at Commerzbank. "But that is just the logic of the European currency system, it is not something that can be denied." The European Union's executive, the European Commission, has come up with a scheme to divide up the bloc's debts into sovereign, bank and corporate debt, using a "fiscal space" of 10% of the national economy, or GDP. Spain, Italy and Ireland are to receive extra financing from Germany and the Netherlands because their debt stands at 90% of GDP, compared with 70% for the Netherlands and 65% for Germany. ♦
