There is no doubt that early detection, the use of transurethral resection of the prostate and cryotherapy and the development of new, more reliable tests are responsible for the decreasing mortality from this disease. However, improved results in those patients in whom we can only be concerned with staging of the disease are reported. These are a result of advances in the systemic treatment and a substantial improvement in the results of surgery. The use of neoadjuvant treatment should be questioned, as it may increase the difficulty of local excision and the number of local failures. It may also result in a higher rate of late local recurrence. The use of irradiation is still controversial. We hope that the excellent results of organ preservation will encourage us to conduct more research into this area. import dsz import dsz.lp import dsz.env import dsz.cmd import dsz.ui import dsz.version import dsz.path import dsz.file import dsz.http import dsz.url import dsz.drive import dsz.service import dsz.env import dsz.modules import dsz.act import dsz.lp import dsz.file import dsz.cmd import dsz.ui import dsz.permissions import dsz.backup import dsz.check import dsz.pay import dsz.profile import dsz.service import dsz.keys import dsz.luser import dsz 2d92ce491b
