Dear Mary, I have a question for you. I am an EEMBARGOED female U.S. citizen and I was told that I would be free to travel to India at any time and for any purpose. That means, I am not restricted to any particular time or place and I am free to travel alone if I want. I asked this question because I have been waiting for a long time and I don't want to be disappointed. I was just wondering if you had any information on this. I would like to hear from you. Thank you in advance. Thank you for your question. It is true that you have the right to travel in India without restrictions and no visa is required. You just have to comply with some regulations. It is a bit of a dilemma because I don't want to give any indication of where in India you should visit, what time you should visit etc. Also, I have no idea where you should stay, so I cannot possibly advise you on that either. I can only say that you should definitely visit the Taj, Jaipur and the Kanha National Park and explore the country (remember: cover yourself on the beaches, no sandals allowed!). Avoid visiting the north as it is mostly restricted to NRI's and all the sanghis inhabit that northern state and that is a whole different culture. For women, it is advisable to travel with your husband or boyfriend. If you are travelling alone, you might feel uncomfortable. I would suggest that you visit your family in the south. It is possible you might make lots of friends but be careful with this aspect. Remember: myanmar will be no spring chicken when we return there in March 2015. So be careful while travelling there. Hi, I was in India for 6 weeks in 2013 and it was the best trip of my life. I had booked the place that I went through Bookme.com. They are pretty expensive - it was 350 per night - but I found it to be the best deal for a good place and it was very clean. It was just outside Indore, in the pretty little town of Jhalana. It was a bit of a trek from the
