The present invention generally relates to a system and method for transferring data packets or objects from one of a number of input/output (I/O) subsystems into one or more of a number of external memory subsystems. More particularly, the present invention relates to a subsystem with a queue in communication with a subsystem having a plurality of internal buses. The present invention also relates to a subsystem which is in communication with a number of external memory subsystems and which stores or receives data packets or objects in the queue between said subsystem and said number of external memory subsystems. The present invention further relates to a method for transferring data packets or objects from one or more of the input/output subsystems to one or more of the external memory subsystems. With the ever increasing requirement for higher performance from the storage subsystems, the number of the external memory modules which are connected to the storage subsystems is rapidly increasing. Typically, two or more host adapters are connected to a storage subsystem to support various types of input/output (I/O) devices. For example, the I/O devices include disk storage devices, such as hard disks, optical disks, and magnetic tapes, as well as memory subsystems, such as dynamic random access memory (DRAM), static random access memory (SRAM), and static random access memory on an application specific integrated circuit (ASIC). In other words, the host adapters are typically inserted into a slot of a backplane inside the storage subsystem to provide external connection ports to the storage subsystem. The slot is preassigned a function of the host adapters inserted into the slot of the storage subsystem. In this situation, the host adapters of the storage subsystem are exposed to the external environment through an external direct access storage device (DASD), such as a single or dual inline memory module (SIMM or DIMM). The host adapters have different I/O addresses, such as an address of a specific external memory subsystem, into which the host adapters are supposed to transfer data. Traditionally, in order for the host adapters to access to the external memory subsystems, a host adapter driver is installed in the operating system of the host computer to enable the host adapters to access to the external memory subsystems. However, the host adapter driver is often a complex software application that is difficult to create, maintain, and modify. Furthermore, the host adapter driver needs to be installed on the host computer each time a new host adapter is installed or when a host adapter is replaced by a new one

How can I import asd function of python module and call it from own function. A: Try this, it will work fine. import import_1 import_1.asd() If you want to access the variables of the parent module, use global keyword, otherwise you need to pass the variables as parameters to the function.
